Explanation Found for "n00b" Graffiti

The construction is gone, but the questions remain. Bwog has been curious for a while: what was the deal with that weird graffiti on the construction around Koronet pizza? We recently spoke to Calvin Gunderson, author of the book A Brief History of Graffiti Art and the Fascio-Reactionary Pigs Who Have Labeled It Vandalism. "It didn't make sense," Gunderson said, "There has been historically very little overlap between the tagging community and the pointless online argument community. It's difficult to see how this might arise, and also how someone could conceive of it as being in any way an appropriate comeback."

The graffiti, in case you missed out, consisted of a small face drawn in two places on the wood construction barriers, with the word "n00b" in elaborate bubble-letters below it. (Bwog is sadly caught without a picture—if you have one send it in—but we hope this artist's rendition will be sufficient.) Several hypotheses had been introduced and failed to find support, but yesterday a newfound piece of evidence appeared to settle the score. A tipster, who wished to remain anonymous for the understandable reason that he or she must have been in a Star Wars chatroom, sent in an AIM transcript that seems to put the blame on someone monikered "Hanshotfrist." Full transcript after the jump.

Happy Birthday Anniversary to the Bwog!

Bwog is very proud to announce that today marks the one-year anniversary of the birth of the Bwog. Bwog hopes that you will continue to read Bwog for another year (and maybe more!) for up-to-date news and tidbits, and that you will never ever get tired of Bwog referring to itself in the third person or realize that it's because Bwog missed the day of class that Bwog was supposed to learn about Bwog's personal pronouns. Bwog.

The Bwog comes in
On little cat feet
It sits looking
Over harbor and city
On silent haunches
And then moves on.

Why is there a profs say the darndest things tags to this? I guess Carl Sandburg was probably a professor of something... somewhere...at some time.

Posted by God, [#7] [reply] (in reply to #6)

I can't believe you guys would support the work of Carl Sandburg, who was a mindless drone and tool used by the U.S. government to make people feel better about being Americans. If he were alive today, he'd probably write poems about how we should invade Iraq and support the illegal state of Israel.

Why don't you get a fucking education and read some about the history of the Palestinian people? That has been the homeland of Muslims since 638.

Why don't YOU get a fucking education? It was occupied by King David long before that. Read the fucking Torah.

This is why I read the Bwog: for the brilliantly and historically relevant witticisms like that. Then, by posting to show my understanding for your wit, I can gain credibility on an anonymous website.

hate the redesign. Want to change it back in honor of the one-year anniversary?

Posted by yeah [#4] [reply]

Yeah, good idea, the redesign is still really awful.

Posted by God, [#5] [reply]

This redesign is like the US support of Israel, it makes absolutely no sense but the perpetrators are going to keep supporting it anyway because it's already started.
